About the story

Rachel Buchanan and Steven Ramone are thrown together by circumstance—and, both of them are certain, a sense of destiny. From the moment they lay eyes on each other they're inseparably linked, with neither one of them able to keep the other out of mind. Rachel's obsession with Steven grows the more quickly of the two of them, and eventually—on the pretense of having him help her move her boxes into her new apartment—she convinces him to give her a try—up against the wall, on the floor, and in the bed. In her defense, it hardly takes any convincing, and barely any words for each of them to confirm their interest to the other—it simply feels natural. It feels good... fun... and right, as though they were made for each other, and everything that either of them had done up to that point in time was simply practice, some kind of trial run. The sex is hot, fiery, and passionate, with a lot of dirty talk and playful naughtiness, but that's hardly a problem—not for either of them. Each of them feels as though things would almost be disappointing if they were any different. The problem lies in the way they met, and the hateful timing that brought them together, having never so much as laid eyes on each other until a mere handful of weeks before Rachel's mother Linda, and Steven's father Michael, are about to tie the knot. They each find their fated soul-mate in the other, just in time to become stepbrother and stepsister as their parents tie the knot. Steven sees it as oddly fated—clearly, the men of his family can't resist the women of hers, and why should they? But while she loves his sometimes irreverent humor, Rachel is slightly disturbed, deep down, as to how people will react to the two of them coming out as a couple—and what it might mean for their life together, as step-siblings and lovers both... particularly when Rachel suddenly turns up pregnant with Steven's baby.

Will the baby be the final wedge that's needed to drive the two of them apart? Or will it serve as further evidence of the rightness of their being together, and only draw them closer?
