Editorial Review

From Library Journal

Readers looking for financial advice will not find it here. Sosnoff, founder and chairman of Atlantic/Sosnoff Capital Corp., has written a book of rambling reminiscences about various episodes in his life with only tangential relevance to the stock market. The style is irritating because of solecisms and wrongly used words. Make sense of this: "It is a herring that adumbrates greed"; or "There are links to each category of investors that are symbiotic yet Darwinian." The tables are as opaque as the prose. Discussions and illustrations of art works make up a goodly portion of the book. Sosnoff may be rich and may know investing, but he can't communicate that knowledge. Not recommended.
