Did You Carry the Flag Today, Charley? By Rebecca Caudill, Nancy Grossman

Will it ever be Charley's turn to carry the flag?

When Charley Cornett begins school in the Appalachian Mountains, his brothers and sisters explain to him that the highest honor at the Little School is being chosen to “carry the flag”—the award each day for a child who has been very good. Mischievous Charley doesn't seem to be the ideal candidate for such a distinction, but eventually he achieves this honor in his own special way.

This much-loved book by a Newbery Honor-winning author has been in print for four decades. Children will identify with Charley's school triumphs and woes and cheer for him to carry the flag!

Editorial Review

Review

"An enthusiastic [Appalachian] mountain boy achieves the honor of carrying the school flag. Wry pencil drawings capture the charm and humorous spirit of the story." --School Library Journal, starred review

From the Publisher

All the children in the Appalachian Mountains know that the highest honor at Little School is being chosen to "carry the flag" and lead the line to the school bus. It's the award given each day to the child who has been most helpful.

When Charley Cornett begins school no one expects him to win the award. Charley's not exactly the helpful type, he's more the curious type. He has to climb out on a tree limb to see how the apple is attached. And he has to hold his hand over the water tap to see if running water can be stopped. Nothing can stop Charley.

Then one special day, a day full of rocks and snakes and books, Charley surprises his family and the entire school!
