Seth (Cyborgs: More Than Machines Book 5) By Eve Langlais

His mission: Blend in with the humans. Save the cyborgs. And seduce the only woman he ever loved, without getting killed.

Cybernetic spy models are different from other humans turned machine. For one thing, they never completely lost touch with their humanity, or their memories. But retaining their identity doesn't mean the military didn't mess with their lives. Seth lost the woman he loved because of their web of lies. When the chance arises to make things right, he relies on his superior intellect—and irresistible charm—to prove his innocence, and make Anastasia his again.

Anastasia might possess upgraded parts and programming, but the scientists never could cure her of her biggest weakness, jealousy. The volatile emotion made her walk away from love once. Can she overcome it and recognize the truth? Or will she continue to let the military manipulate her emotional strings?

Editorial Review

Review

Night Owl Romance, Top Review Pick : " I adore this author's writing style because it provides entertainment, laugh out loud moments and always an intriguing story."

From the Author

"What are you looking for?" Anastasia asked.

"A way out, of course."

"Are you nuts? The lieutenant told us to stay here."

"Indeed he did."

"So why are you looking to flout a direct order?"

"Because I think this is a test."

"What's a test?"

"This room. The waiting. Everything." Seth waved a hand vaguely to gesture around them.

"And what makes you think that?"

"Well, wasn't it you who initially told me that the endurance run was one phase?"

"Yes."

"Then how do you know this room isn't another?"

The word "because" stuck to her tongue. How did she know? "Because this is the military. They expect recruits to follow orders."

"And the regular recruits are. They're the ones running around the quad until they puke. I think whoever selected us wants something more."

"More, as in?"

"Take a look around. You might not know most of these people being new here, but I do. I know for a fact at least three of the folks in here have IQs greater than one thirty."

Make that at least four. At one forty-one, Anastasia scored high on the Mensa scale. "So they're looking for smart recruits."

"For the most part. Charlie is average, but he has other qualities. Like strength. Which is clue number two. Now I think they're looking for something else."

"You mean like most likely to cause trouble?" She couldn't help but smirk.

He didn't take offense. "Maybe. Or the person, or people, most likely to think outside of the box. In this case, a real box. I saw this in a movie once. This psycho killer put a bunch of people in a building and expected them to solve a series of puzzles in order to escape."

"I think you're talking about Saw, and I'd hardly equate the military and their selection process with a fictional killer."

"Ah, but it's not just the military running this gig, or weren't you paying attention as we made our way down here?"

Actually, she had. Despite its location, the installation they found themselves ensconced in had a high number of people dressed in lab coats over civvies. While the guarded checkpoints boasted military personnel, the few others they'd encountered with their coiffed hair, makeup, and lack of military bearing gave them away.

"So we're in some kind of research installation. It doesn't mean they want a bunch of recruits escaping and running amok."

"Then I guess you won't care to join me." Leaning against the wall, palm flat and fingers spread, he arched a brow as the section he touched lit up in the shape of his hand. A panel slid open, just large enough to crawl in.

"How did you know that was there?"

"I think the better question is why. Shall we?" He gestured gallantly at the opening, offering her first crack.

She hesitated. Stay and obey? Or take a chance he was right and move on to the next phase of testing?

"Tick tock," he teased.

She scrambled in first, the duct big enough to crawl comfortably in. She heard him rather than saw him as he followed after.

"Where do you think this goes?" she whispered.

"My guess would be somewhere."

"Smartass."

"Finally, a compliment. Although, I must say, most women tend to comment on my looks, not my intelligence."

"You can add irritating to that list."

"Aw, admit it, gorgeous. You find me intriguing."

"If by intriguing you mean annoying enough that I'm distracted by the weirdness of the situation instead of plotting ways to kill you, then yes."

He laughed, which, in the close confines, echoed around her. She would have retorted, but it was at that moment the portal slid shut, encasing them in darkness. Damn.

"Well that sucks," Seth complained. "Now how am I supposed to check out your ass?"
